THE PLAIN DEALER.

Those of our readers who are interested in Colorado, and who to most thoroughly understand the country, should do so by reading the account of his adventures written by Colonel W. M. Powell, who contributes it to the New York Tribune. From it we learn that he made his way to the mountains of Colorado, and that he had to make his way through the country in their wild positions would not permit him to meet the young Englishman. It is a remarkable story, and one which will interest all who care to read it.

THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER says: "John Cade, of Pennsylvania, who is a member of the German Society, was sent to the West Indies by his master, Mr. John Franklin, to collect debts. He was sold at a slave market, and the captain of the vessel gave him the name of Goveo, whom he afterwards changed to Cade. His master died soon after, and he was sold to another master, who beat him unmercifully. He was sold again, and the new master, Mr. Bowditch, is probably absent from the ocean. It is a sad story, and one which the public is deeply interested in. The author is exceedingly interesting, but is unfortunately too long to be reproduced in our limited space."
